Gov. Zell Miller is seated on a folding chair in the front row of make-believe and tries to appear excited. He keeps his eye on the stage and thrusts his hands together every-time a woman frantically waves the sign: "APPLAUSE."

@Body:The wheels of Georgia's lottery are spinning. In Miller's mind, though, the event is swirling with the potential of vindication. This crowning moment of his three-year effort to bring the lottery to Georgia — which has been turned into a farcical game-show starring the honorable governor himself — seems not so much a victory, but an illusion. Even the million dollar check Miller is soon to present to one of the five "contestants" is bogus: the winner will receive $1,000 a week for 20 years or death, whichever comes first.

Meanwhile, the lottery stage — the clearest, purest form of buffoonery in which the governor might partake — transforms between commercials from bubbling ping pong balls and a lottery version of twister, to cardboard stoves and a roulette wheel holding the winning numbers.

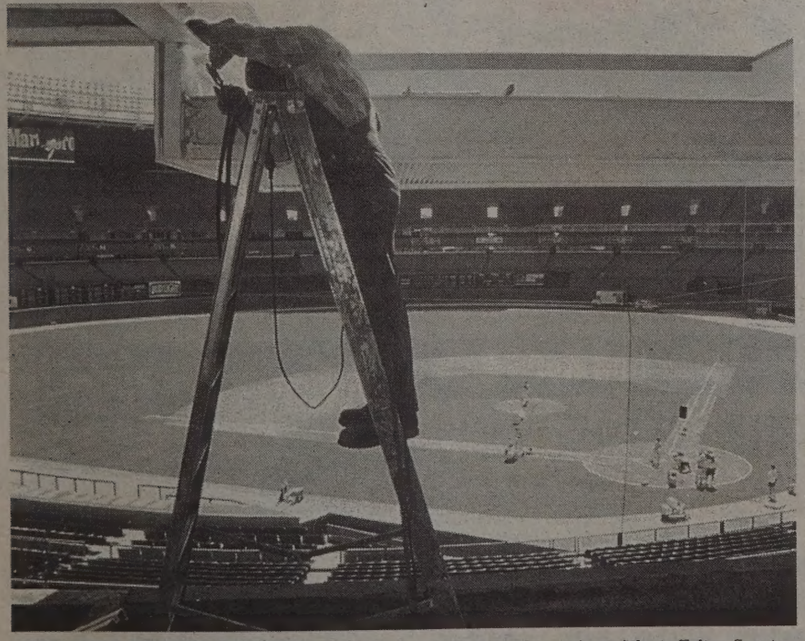
"KEEP IT GOING," says the sign one stage hand waves to the crowd as another throws her arms up to inspire more noise. When Miller, like Monty Hall from "The Price Is Right," jumps on stage, the fishbowl setup in Phipps Plaza fills with cheer. "I was hoping it would be like this!" Miller shouts into the mike.

Like this?

The show breaks to a commercial and the tuxedo-clad weatherman turned host gets dabbed with a rouge sponge and throws a sour face to the audience. Gambling again, he's all teeth and smiles as he moves on to the next game. Remaining contestants are made to don bakers caps, pull a velcro peach from their foreheads, find a number, go to the corresponding cardboard stove, pull out a fake peach cobbler, pull off the cardboard top, pull out an envelope and then, if you're lucky, advance to the finals. The unabashed, self-promotional hoops the lottery commission forces potential winners to jump result in a collective wince of embarrassment for all.

But according to Ruthie Mae Smith, the 73-year-old good loser who would have had to live to 93 to collect her million, "it was all worth the aggravation."

For the governor, who appeared to get carried away with the illusion of his own creation, it "seemed to be exciting and a lot of fun." But as he walked out off Phipps Plaza leaving a pack of reporters to puff up Edmund Wieckowski, the $1,000 a week winner, Miller told CL "I don't know if I will do it again." ■



NON-7TH INNING STRETCH: A workman stretches to make repairs to Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium following a pre-game fire two weeks ago that destroyed the press box. Since the fire, the red-hot Braves are 11-2, raising questions about what part of the stadium should be sacrificed next.

HOME, SICK HOME

BY SHAWN TAYLOR

Do you get dizzy in certain rooms of your house? Does that "new car smell" make you nauseous? Does strong perfume give you headaches? If you answer yes, you may be reacting to the strong chemicals used in many household products.

Diana Hawkins, a Douglasville registered nurse who suffers from multiple chemical sensitivity, knows about healthy and unhealthy homes from experience. She developed serious health problems in the mid '80's and was eventually diagnosed with MCS, or Environmental Illness. Her symptoms included constant back and muscle pain, dizziness and congestion, and what she calls "Brain Fog," a sudden lightheadedness in specific places. She went to several physicians was finally diagnosed by an environmental doctor, who explained that the majority of her symptoms were due to extreme sensitivity to toxic chemicals in the air around her.

"He said I'd have to learn that it wasn't just me," and explained that many people have similar problems but don't realize they are environmentally related. Her treatment included many homeopathic remedies, and sessions of the Healing Touch healing method, of which she is now a practitioner. She worked with groups such as HEAL, a support group and information network for those with chemical sensitivity. In addition, Hawkins and her husband researched chemicals used in household products and construction, all of which they put into practice in the building of their house in Douglasville.

Many of these principles are explained in workshops Hawkins' presents on healthy homes. She has started Health Communication, Inc., which examines houses and suggests ways to make them healthier.

Even if someone can't afford to rebuild or remodel, there are steps they can take to make the home a healthier place. For example, as much as 90 percent of the furniture sold in America contains plywood or particleboard which release Formaldehyde into the air. Formaldehyde is extremely toxic and exposure over long periods of time can lead to a number of health problems.

Many leather and furniture polishes contain toxic chemicals, the smell of which can cause headaches and respiratory problems, and much of the house paint made today contains chemicals which are harmful to breathe, especially for young children.

There are certain house plants, however, such as the Golden Pothos and Corn plants, which actually absorb some of the chemicals from the air.

Hawkins offers a few starting suggestions for creating a healthier household. Eliminating pesticides is important, she says, and are easy to replace with non-toxic products. For example, detergent mixed with water works as an ant-killing spray, and mint plants and other herbs repel various bugs. Also, permanent press fabrics can emit formaldehyde, and dry-cleaning involves many toxic chemicals. If you must dry-clean clothes, Hawkins recommends hanging them outside for a couple of days to air out.

"It's a terrible myth that we have to spend all this money and use these chemicals to keep things

WHAT'S LIFE LIKE AS AN ATLANTA DRAG QUEEN?

BY JEFF SLATE

Virginia

Atlanta:

Everyone assumes you want to be a woman. I wouldn't want to do this on a daily basis. You have to wear twice as much makeup, and panty-hose is definitely not built for us. And when I go shopping I don't know whether to go to the men's department or the women's! Buckhead doesn't appreciate me but the shops in Little Five Points and downtown are used to it. I'm not trying to be a woman. I do this just for fun and for fundraising across the city. You can flirt and get friendly with gay guys and they'll let you go further with them as a drag queen than if you're dressed as yourself. Then it becomes a sexual thing and they think you're hitting on them. I'm a sales rep. My family is very straight-laced. They never discuss it.

Kitty

Atlanta:

I'm a camp drag queen. I'm not a female impersonator. You definitely know I'm a man in a dress. Almost all of us have no desire to be a woman. Dating is pathetic. No one wants to go out with a drag queen. Some gay men view us as not politically correct. They've forgotten their history. It was the drag queens that were out front at the very beginning of the present-day gay movement. I don't think people realize how much work there is in being a drag queen. Between all your makeup, your wig, everything, it's always at least 100 degrees for us even in winter. Most of us have regular 9 to 5 jobs. I'm a visual artist. My mother loves my show.

Romana

Atlanta:

It's gotten better over the years because some of the former queens have left the state and have given the newcomers an opportunity to show their talents. Being a drag queen is a good experience. And doing it for benefits and not for money you have a better time. RuPaul has enlightened people (about drag queens). He's shown he's a normal person who only cares about people and is not biased against anyone. Now that he's a recording artist that makes me feel better. I know that someone who was a drag queen has made it up there and has been accepted (by the gay and straight community). I'm a retail manager. My mother is very religious. She doesn't know I do drag. ■

RuPaul is Everywhere!" "RuPaul Is Everything!" blazoned posters wheat-pasted to Atlanta telephone poles in the mid-1980s. I believed it then, and testify to it now. Atlanta's transplanted homeboy, who'll breeze through town this week, has been popping up all over the talk show circuit and the radio dial. His debut single, "Supermodel (You Better Work)," soared to number one on Billboard's dance charts and spent five weeks hovering in the Hot 100. The video is nominated for an MTV Music Award, and Ru will be one of the show's presenters.

He's been featured in a myriad of major magazines and newspapers including TV Guide, US, People, The New Yorker, Vanity Fair, Rolling Stone, Paper, Details, The New York Times, The Washington Post and Chicago Sun-Times.

He's schmoozed with Liz Taylor at the Cannes Film Festival, snared a small part in Spike Lee's new movie and turned down Janet Jackson's dinner invitation — unfortunately, he was already at the airport on his way out of L.A. when he received the message.

Despite Ru's heartbreaking refusal to break bread with her, word is Janet's seriously considering asking him to tour with her this fall. "I really want to hook up with her," Ru enthuses. "We'd make a great billing!"

Oh, yeah, and Elton John wants to do a duet with him. The mind reels, the brain boils!

But RuPaul takes it all in stride. Although he screamed with delight and ran up and down the hall of his hotel suite for about five minutes after he got the call about Elton, the drag diva's basic attitude is, "Well, I always knew I was a star. I decided when these great things happen, I've got to quit saying, 'I can't believe it' and say instead, 'I can believe it! I must believe it!' Because let's face it, this is my destiny."

Enthralled by Diana Ross, Bette Midler, and Cher, Ru chose stardom as his career path at an early age. Growing up in San Diego, he began playing with makeup and wearing his sister's dresses around age 5. Although he suffered the usual teasing from other kids, Ru's differentness didn't cause him childhood trauma.

"I had this recurring daydream that other kids would surround me on the playground and trap me in a circle, yelling 'Faggot, sissy!'" Ru reminisces. "But that never happened. I think it's something about my character or my sincerity that outshone my differentness. People were telling me about my sexuality before I even had a clue, but it was never a problem. And at the point where it could have been a problem, in early adolescence, I moved away from my immediate circle and came to Atlanta, so I sort of bypassed all that.

"Being gay has never been the problem for me that it was and still is for a lot of other people, but that's not to say that I haven't experienced the pain of it, because that's always there," he says. "I've always been flamboyant and charming, and people respond to that. Once I expose myself to them, and act like their best friend or their mother or whatever, it's very hard for them to be ugly. I open myself up to people in my show and in day-to-day interactions, and that quality has always helped me get along with a variety of people."

When he moved to Atlanta in his teens, Ru began honing his talent, experimenting with "looks" and getting his bad self before the public with a Madonna-like genius for self-promotion. Impatient with institutions, he dropped out of Northside High School of the Performing Arts before it wrecked his singing voice. He took up with the Now Explosion, a dangerous crew of bad influences, and worked various clubs around town with a stage act, RuPaul and the U-Hauls, and a band, Wee Wee Pole. Ru tried out his evolving personae and developed his on-camera poise on the public access series, "The American Music Show" and "Dance-O-2DRama."

Dick Richards, who created "The American Music Show" with James Bond, also co-owns (with Ted Rubenstein) Funtone USA, the indie label that produced the Now Explosion's EP Bringing It On Home to Daddy. Spotting RuPaul's mega-star potential, Funtone released the EPs Sex Freak and RuPaul Is Starbooty: The Original Motion Picture Soundtrack.

When he wasn't recording, performing, penning his photocopied memoirs, or pasting up flyers, Ru made movies. With auteurs Jon Witherspoon and Wayne Hollowell, Ru filmed an oeuvre including "Terror 3-D," "Mahogany 2," "Voyeur," "American Porn Star," and the "Starbooty" series. An eerie harbinger of things to come, in "Starbooty" he played America's first black supermodel turned crime fighter.

"He was born to make movies," says James Bond, who acted as executive producer on "Terror 3-D," "Starbooty" and "Wild Thing," in which he also played RuPaul's father, sparking speculation about RuPaul's true parentage.

"That shows what good actors we are," Bond boasts with a knowing chuckle. "I'm not RuPaul's father, but I played one on TV. But seriously, RuPaul is an enormous talent. He's a singer first, an actor second and a drag queen third. If you can get past the legs and hair — oh, that hair! — there's nothing but pure talent. There's no stopping him."

Conspiracy buff Bond adds, "You know, years after we made 'Wild Thing,' John Sayles came out with a movie called 'Wild Thing' with basically the same plot as ours. It's probably a coincidence, but it makes you wonder. We did some other things first, too. 'The American Music Show' shot TV in people's homes long before Arsenio or 'Wayne's World.' We did that sneezing on the cocaine thing before Woody Allen did it in 'Annie Hall.' Weird, huh?"

Weird perhaps, but hardly weirder than Ru's roles on the Atlanta stage. He was Riff Raff in Theatrical Outfit's "Rocky Horror Picture Show" and played a sex-crazed bitch in the Outfit's "The Shaggy Dog Animation." "Shaggy Dog" composer Jimmy Harry, Ru's current songwriting partner, produced the demo that landed RuPaul his Tommy Boy Records contract. He, Ru and Larry Tee penned the smash single, "Supermodel."

In the future, Ru can see himself on Broadway, but right now he's too busy with other things. When Tommy Tune wanted him to audition for the Mada Maples part in "Will Rogers Follies," Ru was forced to gratefully decline.

"I was thrilled that he asked me, and it really would've been fun to do," he says, "but with everything else I'm doing, I didn't have the time. Besides, I can make more money doing what I do!"

The need to make more money and hit the big time eventually propelled RuPaul out of Atlanta to the "city that never sleeps." In 1987, Ru realized what legions of superstars before him knew: New York is the launching pad for the rocket to stardom. He, Larry Tee and Lahoma VanZandt (a.k.a. Jon Witherspoon) set forth to make their mark in Gotham City. Getting enough club gigs to support himself was rough at first, but RuPaul persevered.

"I'd been working the clubs up there since 1982, so I already had some contacts," Ru explains. "Still it was difficult, because the old guard is always a little suspicious of the new guard. I wasn't part of any clique up there, so I really had to make it on my own. It wasn't that different for me, because before I dropped out, I went to a bunch of high schools, and I learned how that whole clique scene worked. I knew it was just a matter of time before I infiltrated it and began to develop my audience."

Sure enough, Ru soon began to claw his way to the top of New York's talent heap. As a downtown sensation with a cult following and the sobriquet "Queen of Manhattan," he gained entree into the fashion world, where he rubbed elbows with such luminaries as Francesco Scavullo, Jean Paul Gaultier, Todd Oldham, Isaac Mizrahi, Anna Sui and Mathu and Zaldy. Gradually, he forsook ratty wigs, football shoulder pads and homemade Mylar capes for the sparklingly sophisticated style he flashes today. Exposure to this crowd, plus some runway experience and emceeing fashion events, helped him create his affectionate lampoon of the industry in his single "Supermodel."

"Supermodel" made RuPaul the first drag queen ever to land on the pop charts. His ebullient new single and video, "Back to My Roots," keeps him in the limelight, which seems to be his natural habitat.

get famous then complain about the rigors of being a star, RuPaul joyously embraces the responsibilities fame has thrust upon him. Currently touring to promote Supermodel of the World, the Tommy Boy album released in June, Ru is characteristically upbeat.

"I love the road," he asserts from a hotel room in Dallas, where he is putting on makeup for his gig at the Lizard Lounge later that night. "I've been traveling since November, usually four days out then two back in New York, so I can keep up with my life there. I bring posters and personal stuff so I feel at home in the hotel rooms. And the young people keep it interesting."

Ru doesn't mind waking up at 4 a.m. for "CBS This Morning," or taking early flights, and faces the agony of crotch tucking with a noble stoicism. "Everybody asks me about how I do that, but I tell them to wait for my beauty book," he chirps mischievously. "Several publishers are interested, but I haven't signed anything yet. I want the book to be for everybody, not just drag queens, because beauty is about finding what's inside of you and working that thang! It'll be a guideline to help people discover their real essences. I'm going to tell people they can live their lives any way they want, which is a basic part of my message, because once you get down to the core of who you really are, it's like a rebirthing.

"I developed my philosophy of self-love as a means of surviving, because during so much of my life I felt like an outsider," Ru says. "Once you feel like you're going to have to survive without approval from society, it frees you up to delve deep down inside yourself to find your true talents and shortcomings. Then you've got a sense of self you can always rely on, and you can project to others."

RuPaul's relentlessly positive message gains resonance from his unique position in the marketplace. "RuPaul exudes an overwhelming sense of positivity about everything," says David A. Keeps, senior editor at Details, who's written about Ru for that magazine and The New York Times.

"It's easy for a jaded New Yorker like me to write him off as someone blathering on about peace, love and flowers, which is not a new message. Yet, his obvious sincerity and the fact that the message is being delivered by a black man dressed as a woman makes it somehow more powerful. It's one thing for the Beatles to preach 'All you need is love,' but when you hear it from a 7-foot drag queen in heels, it seems more urgent."

Keeps adds that RuPaul's talent gives him added credibility and significant crossover appeal. "'Supermodel' and 'Back to my Roots' are great, but they're novelty songs," he says. "I was very pleased, when I heard the album, at the musical and lyrical depth of it. 'Prisoner of Love,' for instance, is very heartfelt and poignant. It doesn't matter that it's being sung by a man in a wig and pumps. 'Supermodel of the World' is a very serious, accomplished album of dance music."

The fact that Ru backs his glamorous drag queen image with solid talent helps him get a diversity of bookings, Keeps believes. "I think the reason straight people respond so well to him is partly because, unlike drag queens who lip synch to other people's music, RuPaul has his own product. That makes him more special and helps him get wider exposure. Plus, he's just amazing. RuPaul has transcended drag to become a larger-than~2Dlife creature, much like Cher and Madonna. He's almost a cartoon character, but I don't mean that in a derogatory way. Monica Lynch [head of Tommy Boy Records] put it best when she said, 'RuPaul has the Big Bird effect.' He's created a persona that sort of takes on a life of its own. If he chooses to, he can be an incredibly powerful symbol, a lightning rod for issues of sexism, racism and homophobia."

RuPaul has often alluded to the difference between being treated as a goddess when he's in drag and feeling invisible or being perceived as threatening when he's a tall black man in street clothes. Social activism has been part of his agenda from the early days. He marched against racism in Forsyth County, spoke out against Reaganism, and sang at the gay and lesbian march on Washington. He's donated his time and talent to many AIDS benefits, most recently the one in Cannes to promote AIDS awareness in Third World countries. Liz Taylor invited him there.

"It was so funny," Ru tells of his meeting with Liz. "Her hairdresser, Jose Eber, was standing on the sidelines and he saw me working the room and working my mouth and everything and he just busted up laughing. He really gave me the fuel to get it goin' on, because I was a tiny bit nervous, but Liz was an absolute living doll, she didn't give me any shade at all. It was great being at Cannes, first of all to be able to help raise so much money for the plague, and then there was the glamour! It was everything I expected, chock full of major stars and paparazzi."

The Cannes Film Festival fueled the flame of Ru's cinemania. Imagine his delight when Spike Lee offered him the chance to vamp on the big screen.

"When I found out Spike Lee wanted me to audition for the part of a snaggle-toothed hooker in his next movie," Ru relates, "I was out in L.A. for the John and Leeza show. I was in a totally fabulous penthouse suite they'd gotten for me, and I had a video camera. I put together a half-hour videotape with seven costume changes, wigs and all, and I just went off. Spike had this line for me, 'I ain't no pootah. I keeps my pussy clean.' I said that line in about a hundred different variations. When the camera should've been turned off, I kept it rolling. And it worked! When I met him, Spike said, 'You really worked hard for this, didn't you?' He was very sweet. The movie's the story of a person growing up in Brooklyn, so there are a lot of kids in it. They were really excited about my being in the movie, which I loved.

"I'm hoping this part is just the tip of the iceberg for me in movies, because I really want to be a major motion picture star," he confides. "I keep thinking it's my first break in the movies, but then I remember I made about 25 movies in Atlanta, where I learned everything I know! Of course, I love TV, too, and speak fluent television."

Ru's work on the talk show circuit has allowed him to become chummy with a longtime idol, Joan Rivers. "I just love her," he gushes. "I wake up every morning to watch her, no matter where I am. She's like an old girlfriend, you know? I love that kind of patter where it's wacky and fun but there's no harm intended. I was taping "CBS This Morning" recently, and I was scheduled to do an hour show with Joan the following week. Joan stuck her head in the door of the studio to say 'Hi' and remind me I'd be working with her soon, so I should 'Give them nothing!' She's a scream.

"Joan's my favorite talk show host, but I'm also grateful to Arsenio Hall for giving me my first big break out in L.A.," Ru acknowledges. "We got along great both times I was on the show, but I thought my first appearance was better. The second time, we had so much information to get across that it wasn't as spontaneous."

I ask about his memorable comment on Arsenio, "I'm just a regular Joe with a unique ability to accessorize."

"When I'm up on stage, or on a talk show set, these things just come out of my mouth," Ru says. "It's almost like I'm channeling. I'll think about it later and wonder, 'Now where was that coming from?'"

Channeling or not, it's clear RuPaul remains becomingly modest about his celebrity. He says he first realized he was famous when his sister Renee told him a colleague at work had shown her an article about him.

"San Diego is the middle of nowhere, and I should know because I was born there. For me to realize people in that far corner of the earth knew about me meant I'd really made it. Also, when I got my own Winnebago on the set of the 'Supermodel' video, I felt pretty special.

"Those were real turning points but on the other hand, I've considered myself a star from day one," he reflects. "I know I'm very, very lucky because I've been given a gift. I've always respected the gift, and tried to keep my talent and my faith in myself dominant over the monster side of me, because I have a monster side just like everybody else. The gift is very valuable, and I give it back freely. It's for everybody." ■

RuPaul will perform at Velvet on Aug. 5 and make a promotional appearance at Turtle's Rhythm and Views, 2099 Peachtree Road Aug. 7 at 5 p.m.

BUSY PEOPLE DON'T GO TO SINGLES BARS.

Single professionals are too busy for singles bars. Why? Because they focus their energy on their work, and on taking care of themselves. They are good at what they do, and they look good. But they have little time to spare.

I know, because these eligible men and beautiful women are my clients. Established in Buckhead since 1983, Traditional Matchmakers boasts an impeccable reputation, and the largest pool of busy professionals in the area.

My service is confidential, and very personal. With your feedback, I get to know you, and introduce you to someone of your calibre. So why not expand your social circle? And call me today for an appointment. It is an old-fashioned idea, and it works.
